THE OCCASIONAL FINANCER Extraordinary. In Answer to some Objections.

Sed male dum recites, incipit esse tuum.

MARTIAL.

AS the preceding Paper, No. IV. closed one Part of the Argument which I proposed to offer to the Confederation of my Countrymen in favour of an Excise upon Wines; I am, in a sort, at leisure to bestow this on those Gentlemen who have honoured the Occasional Financer with their Notice: For it must be esteemed an Honour to receive even Correction from Persons whose elevated, whose penetrating Understandings are employed in nothing less than prescribing Rules to assembled Senates, and giving Laws to the Lawgivers of a whole Nation.

To which Honour I have this additional Satisfaction, that 'tis the Manner, rather than the Matter, 'tis the Conduct of the Writers, rather than the Argument, that has hitherto been criticised: To which Points I shall therefore speak here, leaving such Things as look like Objections to the Reasonings themselves to a more proper Part of these Papers; not designing to interrupt the Thread of my Argument with them: For which Reason I have, without affixing any Number to it, called this The Occasional Financer Extraordinary.

Among which, my Honourable Monitors, Mr. D'Anvers's Observations, in a Letter of Saturday the 10th instant to himself, claim the first Place. — In speaking to which I can't help taking Notice of the entertaining and judicious Steps by which he falls on the Subject; where, after a very sage Reflexion of the Attention which Princes and Statesmen ought to give to the low Wit of the Populace, he takes particular Notice of a Ballad-Singer and his little, Political Ditty, as he styles it in the diminutive and endearing Language of a Parent, tho' 'tis remarkably one of the longest and most over-grown Babes that ever was seen with so little Wit. — Next to which he is no less pleased with a Tobacconist's Device, and a Vintner's Sign, both apparently from the same paternal Reasons of Affection: — Which immediately after dilates itself to a numerous Offspring of punning-metaphorical Quibbles, all which he secretly blesses as so many hopeful Children, that promise their dear Father a strenuous Assistance in combating that Monster, an Excise on Wines, &c. which, as Don Quixote did a Flock of Sheep for an Army, our Political Knight-Errant has sometimes taken for a Trojan Horse, and sometimes for a terrible Dragon.

In this happy Tranquillity of Mind, from the pleasing Prospect of such powerful Seconds, the good Old Gentleman (as he often does when he designs to be witty) goes quietly to sleep, without the least Danger, one would imagine, of uneasy Dreams; but in spite of this flattering Review of his Forces, the same Image that has formerly so often disturbed his Rest, haunts him afresh with Visions more terrible than that of an Excise. In vain the Dragon-drawn Chariot seemed overturned in the Wooden Cut; in vain the headless Rebus was seen bleeding on the Vintner's Sign; the goodly Personage (who is the Source of all his Disturbance) appears to him, still unburt, in a large Elbow-Chair; and, Oh killing Sigh! is still a Personage in Authority: At which starting into a fresh Panick, he wakes himself with his own Cries.

When, like Richard from his Couch, reanimating himself again, the first Object that presents itself to his View is the Occasional Financer. And here, since his Army of Pigmy-Puns have lanced their little Points without Success; since neither a Rebus nor a more powerful Prophecy have prevailed; he reinforces them with an Etymology. The Word Financer is certainly of French Derivation; and therefore down with an Excise, down with the Dragon. Most logically concluded, it must be confessed, and well worthy the Man; who, borrowing an Argument from Mother Shipton, could prove an Excise on Wines dangerous to the Nation, because it might happen to be proposed in a Year when Easter and Lady-Day coincide. O profound Politician, great Counsellor and Legislator! to whom Gadbury, Lilly, and Partridge, with Foreight himself, mult veil their Bonnets!

After this home Stroke at the Title, he attacks the Style; and is much disgusted at the pedantic Fyitian, which pleads to rescue sucking Infants, and those unborn, from the unwholesome Potions of our Wine-Brewers; quite forgetting, in all Appearance, how pathetically he has himself called on all the Nation to rescue those Brewers themselves from the Bomby-Jaws of a devouring Dragon.

My other two Friends are, Vinarius in the same Craftsman, and a Writer of Observations in the Daily Journal of the 9th instant; who, with Mr. D'Anvers, seem offended at the Epithets bestowed on the Sophificators of Wine. Where, after observing that the first Letter-Writer condescends to fear there is too much Truth in the Charge of Fraud, tho' he is unwilling to allow it an unwholesome one; I must reply seriously to my two latter Antagonists, that I think the Trade deserves no better Appellations; and appeal to all my Countrymen, whether those Names are any sort of Abuse of the Guilty, on whom only (and not on the Innocent or Honest, as such I suppose there are) they are bestowed. But these Gentlemen are, it seems, People whose Tongues are hardy enough to style the Established Laws and the Officers who execute them, Harpies and Beasts of Prey; while their Ears are so tender, that they can't bear to hear Fraud and Poisoning called by their own proper Names.

There is indeed one Part of the Charge in which both Vinarius and the Observer seem to agree; which is, that of an Abuse offered to the Characters of the fair Ladies who adorn the Bars of most Retailers. This, if there had been really an inadvertent Slip of my Pen in any ambiguous Expression, I should readily acknowledge and beg Pardon for; but upon the least Review of the Paragraph, it will appear either a malicious Misrepresentation, or a gross Misapprehension. Vinarius concludes it, because I say that the Retailers Customers are welcome to their very Bedbammers; but he was certainly Vinofus, as well as Vinarius, when he drew such a Conclusion; for 'tis said in Answer to the Objection made to Excisemen entering their Private Houses, and alludes only to the known and every Day Practice of the Company behind the Bar, or to other Rooms, where the Family lie, when the rest of the House happens to be full, without the least Intimation that those Customers were welcome to any Thing there, but drink their Liquors. And as to the Insults mentioned in the same Paragraph, the Observer allows them to be Fact; and which I myself then suppose would be resented as such, and punished with the Round-House, &c. accordingly, were it not for the Gains of the Trade. So far was I from intimating their being received with any sort of Approbation by the Women to whom they are offered.

I have answered this Part of the Charge with particular Care; because whatever Opinion those Writers may entertain of the Occasional Financer, they will find him as incapable of offering such an Insult or Abuse to the good Names or Reputations of innocent, inoffensive Women, as he is willing to expose those dishonest and mischievous Practices, which he has, he thinks, but justly censured.

My Friend in the Daily Journal asks, "Whether, like Balaam the venal Prophet of 'Old, I am hired to curse the People?'" But what resemblance he finds between the Wine-Brewers and God's Chosen People, I can't guess; unless he thinks that, like those, they also have a Commission to destroy and possess the Land; nor am I less at a loss to find a Parallel between the Prophet and myself, except the Observer's Readers should think that we agree in the Circumstance of having been both admonished by the same sort of Animal; tho', whatever the Prophet did by his, I leave all the World to determine, since he has thus taken the Saddle upon himself, whether I have smitten mine unjustly, notwithstanding his very eloquent Apology for the People; in whose Defence he has for once spoken, inspired in all Appearance, not by the Spirit which opened the Mouth of the Hebrew Quadrupede, but by that of downright English Stum.

WHEREAS Caleb D'Anvers and Company, who have, for some Time past, carried on the Trade of brewing PATRIOTISM, are apprehensive that the Excisemen in Westminster-Hall may, some time or other, lay their Compositions under such a Tax as would spoil the Trade, they now permit their Receipt to be published for common Benefit.

Be it known therefore, that this highly approved Liquor consists of equal Quantities of a flat sort of SELF-CONTRADICTION, an eager, hungry, SELF-INTEREST, and the fiery Spirit of SEDITION doubly distilled; which they sell also separate, by the Name of rectified Spirit of Liberty; but as this Composition is very apt to be upon the fret, 'tis often necessary to dash it with a little seeming Love for PRESENT ESTABLISHMENTS; and if it happens to grow rapid, as 'tis frequently the Case, especially in Summer, a proper Quantity of ANTIMINISTERIAL EXCLAMATION quickens it again, like Arsenic in White Wine.

However, notwithstanding this Publication, they hope that such of their Customers as want Skill or Convenience to prepare it for themselves, will still apply to the said Caleb and Company, at their Vaults in Covent-Garden; where they continue to deliver it as usual, at the most reasonable Rates, with proper Encouragement to those who sell it again.

N. B. That so small a Quantity as Two Penny-worth will often heat and intoxicate as effectually as so much GIN; and, like that celebrated Cordial too, it makes all Sorts of People, BEGGARS and COBLERS not excepted, instantly as wise and as great as LEGISLATORS or PRINCES.

Read, try, and judge; and speak as you find.

On Saturday arrived the Holland Mail, and yesterday the French.

Paris, Feb. 25. N. S.
M<sup>rs</sup> Adalie de France the Third, who died the 19th, did not sicken till the 17th, when she was seized with a Fever, and grew delirious delirious the next day. She was immediately let Blood in the Foot, and twice afterwards; but it signified nothing.

Their Majesties, who were to have returned to Versailles the 21st, will stay at Marly till Saturday next, on Account of that Prince's Death.

By Letters from Avignon of the 11th instant, we understand, that the Affair of the Interruption of Commerce with France was not made an End of, as it had been reported; the Ground of which Report was this: The Marquis de Maillebois, who commands the Troops of France, having made some Proposals to the Vice-Legate of Avignon, in order to bring about an Accommodation, that Prelate answered him, that he had not Full Power to grant what he demanded; but that he would dispatch a Courier to Rome, to acquaint the Pope with them; and that in the mean time he desired him to suffer a certain Quantity of Provisions to enter the City for the Subsistence of the Inhabitants; which was granted by the Marquis de Maillebois.

The Corpse of Madame de France was carried from Versailles in the Night between the 23d and 24th, and interred at St. Denys, where it was presented to the Monks by the Cardinal de Rohan, Great Almoner of France, and by the Grand Master and the Master of the Ceremonies. The young Prince of Conty was Chief Mourner, attended by the Dukes of Tallard and a certain Number of Officers of the King's Household.

'Tis impossible to express what a great Number of People are taken ill here with Colds, there not being a House without some Sick in it. Three in four of the Monks and Nuns keep their Beds. There are above 800 Sick in the Hôtel des Invalides; and the like in other Colleges. All the Letters from Foreign Countries, as well as from the Provinces of France, are full of this Malady, which is very fatal in some Places.

The Queen has been blooded by way of Precaution, being big with Child.

By one Man's selling out, the Actions are fallen down to 1700 Livres. They seem to stand upon a ticklish Foundation!

Extract of a Letter from Paris, dated February 24. N. S.

This Day a Courier passed thro' this Place with an Express to Rome, the Contents whereof are whispered here to be, that several Gentlemen, who are known in England by the Name of the Dawley Congress, have sent to desire the Chevalier de St. George, for several very important Reasons, to decline his Pretensions to the Crown of Poland, at this Extraordinary Conjunction, in favour of the L—d V—t B—ke; who has also dispatched the Sieur B—, famous for his Negotiations at Dunkirk, as his Plenipotentiary to the Primate of Poland, to acquaint him with the said Proposition, which it is not doubted, but will be very agreeable News to the whole Polish Nation, as that Nobleman has distinguished himself so eminently, both for his Politicks and Prowess, in the several great Scenes of Action in which he has been engaged; especially as his Religion can be no Obstacle to his Election, he having embraced the Communion of the Holy Roman Catholic Church several Years ago, when he was in the Service of the Chevalier de St. George, as his Treasurer at this Place. The same Letters add, that there are some Powers who intend to oppose his Election, upon Account of his Usage of the Catalans, and his Attachment to the Interest of the Chevalier; but it is believed it will be without Success.

Philadelphia, Sept. 14. Monday last the four Men, who have lain in our Gaol some Months under Sentence of Death for Piracy, were brought to the Court-House, and received his Majesty's most gracious Pardon.

Oct. 19. On Sunday last arrived here Capt. Timberton, in 17 Weeks from Rotterdam, with 220 Palatines, 44 died in the Passage. About 3 Weeks ago the Passengers, dissatisfied with the Length of the Voyage, were so imprudent as to make a Mutiny; and being the stronger Party, have ever since had the Government of the Vessel, giving Orders from among themselves to the Captain and Sailors, who were threatened with Death in case of Disobedience. Thus having Sight of Land, they carried the Vessel twice backward and forward between our Capes and Virginia, looking for a Place to go ashore they knew not where. At length they compelled the Sailors to cast Anchor near Cape May, and of them took the Boat by Force and went ashore; from whence they have been 5 Days coming up by Land to this Place, when they found the Ship arrived. Those concerned in taking the Boat are committed to Prison.

Boston, Nov. 6. A most unhappy Murder was committed in this Town on Friday the 3d instant, by a Mother upon her own Child, an Infant Son of about 8 Months old: We are told she first cut its Windpipe, and afterwards its Head almost off. The Mother has been for some time distracted; and is committed to Gaol, but insensible of the barbarous Action.

By Letters from New-York, of the 30th of last Month, we are advised, that the Corporation in Common Council there were going in a full Body to pay their Compliments to the Lord Augustus Fitzroy, Son of the Duke of Grafton, and presented him with the Freedom of the City, the Seal whereof is inclosed in a Gold Box.
